Botswana, country in the centre of Southern Africa. The territory is roughly triangular—approximately 600 miles (965 km) from north to south and 600 miles from east to west—with its eastern side protruding into a sharp point. Its eastern and southern borders are marked by river courses and an old wagon road; its western borders are lines of longitude and latitude through the Kalahari, and its northern borders combine straight lines with a river course. Within the confines of Botswana's borders is a rich variety of wildlife, including many species of mammals, birds, reptiles, amphibians, and fish.

Nswazwi is a small village in the central district of Botswana that has slightly scattered settlements and very few shopping supermarkets. It has a primary school, Nswazwi Primary, a secondary school called Madawu Community Junior School and the largest brigade development trust in Botswana, called Nswazwi Brigade. There is also a Kgotla—a public meeting, community council or a traditional law court usually headed by the village chief.

Speaker: Bokani NTHABA

I came to Japan in 2019 to further my studies. I am now pursuing a PhD at Kyushu University. Besides my academic interests, I was drawn to Japan by its culture and the work ethic of the Japanese people, these are some of the many things that I admire a lot here in Japan. After graduation, I will be a lecturer at a university and a researcher in the field of geophysics back in Botswana.
